REMEMBER

Prep cruises, galley duty, 2400 liberty, the good old days...

. . . 90 in the shade, in-port maintenance, A/C?, refreshing dives . . .

. . . Ireland, Blarney Castle, pubs and beer . . .

. . . Jacksonville, yardbirds, sand, long walks to nowhere

. . . Palma de Mallorca, the carrier J.F.K., Blood Alley, whitehats everywhere . . .

. . arrivals, Brazosport College '72, VIP cruises, times to trash out another set of whites . . .

REMEMBER.

Halloween at the Pizza Hut, the mosquito farm, corps trip to Houston, football games, the Rice band . . .

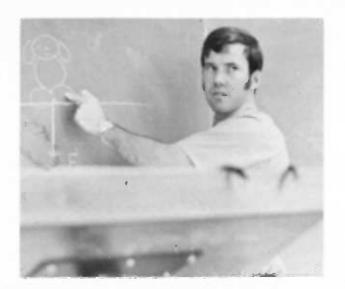

. . . the people, Capt. Oh Wow, Her Self, The Flame, Doctor Mulkey and his clockwork interns, Doc Clark, Bump (getting wet from the start), Clipper, Alice in Wonderland . . .

. . . Classes of '72, '73, '74

. . . '75 - just another departure as the band plays on.

REMEMBER

I shut my eyes, and I can see How once we all sat on the hold,

And sang the songs that memory Had not permitted to grow old.

We shall part no more
in the wind and the rain,
where thy last farewell was said;

But perhaps I shall meet thee and know thee again,

When the sea gives up her dead.

THE CRUISE OF 1974

The Cruise of 1974 brought with it mixed emotions of anticipation and frustration. The frustration - A Northern European cruise traded for one which took us to the Caribbean. Oh, we weren't complaining, but . . .

The anticipation - That certain excitement that every cruise brings with it. New places, foreign faces, and much learning lie just over the Galveston Gulf horizon.

As usual, the journey started with much preparation and the hurried application of make-up to the "Clipper." As every deck cadet chipped and painted in the pre-cruise week, he remembered the immortal phrase of Cmdr. W. T. McMullen, "A clean ship is a happy ship."

The Engine Department, however, spent the best part of a working day cleaning up an oil spill which occurred about the time the Coast Guard inspectors arrived on the scene. Typical TMA Beginning!

LEFT: Jimmy Teeter is the picture of the TMA cadet at work.
MIDDLE: As in any military organization, work becomes a spectator sport.

BOTTOM: SCHUCKHART, FLOYD, AND JONES train for maintenance engineering degree.

A few goodbyes and a moment of tenderness are all that remain prior to weighing anchor.

The time has come to say good-bye my love, And words cannot express my feelings now. The time has come to say good-bye my love, But I'll return and I'll wave from the bow. Write me, let me know that you still care, I'll write back and you'll be on my mind. Write me, let me know that you still care, We'll embrace again, for all things pass with time.

Tarring the stays is more difficult, and is done by an operation which the sailors call "riding down." A long piece of rope - topgallant-studding-sail halyards, or something of the kind - is taken up to the masthead from which the stay leads, and rove through a block for a girtline, or, as the sailors usually call it, a gantline; with the end of this, a bowline is taken round the stay, into which the man gets with his bucket of tar and bunch of oakum; and the other end being fast on deck, with someone to tend it, he is lowered down gradually, and tars the stay carefully as he goes. There he "swings aloft 'twixt heaven and earth," and if the rope slips, breaks, or is let go, or if the bowline slips, he falls overboard or breaks his neck. This, however, is a thing which never enters into a sailor's calculation. He only thinks of leaving no "holidays" (places not tarred) - for, in case he should, he would have to go over the whole again - or of dropping no tar upon deck, for then there would be a soft word in his ear from the mate. In this manner I tarred down all the head stays, but found the rigging about the jib booms, martingale, and spritsail yard, upon which I was afterward put, the hardest. Here you have to "hang on with your eyelids" and tar with your hands.

- R. H. Dana (1840)

The highlights of every cruise are the ports that are visited. On our Caribbean cruise, San Martin was considered by many to be one of the most relaxing and exciting ports. We were royally entertained there by Mr. and Mrs. Joe Ferrari, who made the facilities of their resort hotel available to us during our entire visit. We were wined, dined, and invited to relax in the sun until our hearts were content. We left San Martin with the romantic feeling that only the smaller islands of the Caribbean provide.

What's this? It's port time again! We played basketball in Colombia and baseball in Cuba, enjoyed the local color of Vera Cruz, and of course ended up in New Orleans.

Our sports events helped us to develop international good will, and provided relief from the closeness of ship living. We learned much about our opponents, mostly that they were better than us. However, it made no difference because we never stayed long enough in one place to be laughed at. Besides, T.M.A. cadets seem to ignore the often quoted "thrill of victory and agony of defeat." We simply have an enjoyable time on the least amount of money possible.

OUTLINE ARRANGEMENT

AN INVESTMENT IN THE FUTURE

We at Gulf Oil Corporation believe in the future growth of the American flag tanker industry.

Despite the current supply and demand picture, United States and world-wide demands for petroleum will continue to increase.

There will be a need for tankers for many, many, years to come. And we believe that new American flag tankers manned by U.S. mariners can compete successfully in international trade.

Because of our faith in the American tanker industry, Gulf Oil Corporation has contracted for the construction of two 265,000 deadweight ton tankers—the largest to be ordered in the United States by a major oil company.

These new Very Large Crude Carriers will trade worldwide. And eventually, should be accommodated by super-ports in the United States when completed. Each will be capable of carrying 2 million barrels of crude oil.

Because of the low-cost transportation tankers of this size offer, these VLCC's will play an important role in helping America economically meet its expanding need for imported oil.

Gulf Oil Corporation is Proud to be part of America's merchant marine, and proud to have a hand in making this country's shipping and shipbuilding industries more efficient and competitive.
